"Kurokawa-onsen-kyo"

A Japanese village and traditional inns existing side by side. How a local spa became the model of many modern-day Japanese onsen resorts.

Originally, only the local residents of the mountainous area surrounding Mount Aso shared and enjoyed the small spa resort of Kurokawa. However, in 1964 the number of hotels in the area began to increase after Kurokawa was designated a national health resort and construction of the Yamanami Highway was completed. Even so, visitors to this area were largely limited to those who came to attend banquets on weekends rather than those planning to just relax and enjoy the hot springs. As Japan’s post-war economic boom drew to a close many of these new hotels began to experience financial difficulties, and it was around this time that one enterprising innkeeper from Kurokawa literally took matters into his own hands by fashioning a cave in the hills behind his house, drawing water from a hot spring and creating a rustic rotenburo or outdoor bath. His efforts were soon emulated by several other younger generation innkeepers, and before long the atmosphere of Kurokawa became similar to that of one large inn close to nature in the countryside. Eventually this gave rise to the concept of “The Whole Town as an Inn”, where the streets are like corridors and the individual ryokan are like the guest rooms leading off from them. In recent years the entire community, including restaurant-owners and shopkeepers have become involved in this movement. In turn this has led to the production of the Nyuto Tegata (Onsen-hopping Pass) a kind of coupon encouraging visitors to bathe in up to three different outdoor baths during their visit to the resort. The popularity of the pass continues to grow, thanks largely to the media and by word of mouth. This extremely successful “Kurokawa spa resort formula” is now one that other onsen resorts throughout Japan strive to emulate. Currently, Kurokawa Onsen is concentrating its efforts on looking at ways of attracting more visitors from overseas.

KUROKAWA ONSEN
Features of Kurokawa Onsen

Kurokawa Onsen lies in a mountainous region of northeastern Kyushu on the edge of the Aso caldera and the Kuju mountains. To the south you can view the spectacular five peaks of Mount Aso as well as a rich variety of scenery ranging from the Aso caldera itself to grassland plains, plateaus, springs and a number of natural geographical formations. The town of Kurokawa itself is largely unspoilt and has managed to retain its natural beauty and traditional Japanese charm.

Kurokawa Spa Resort

Just a short distance from the prefectural road you will discover Kurokawa and its array of onsen ryokan, shops and cafes. Take a stroll through the narrow streets and winding pathways and you’ll soon forget your everyday worries and start to imagine yourself transported back to the Japan of old. Traditional architecture combined with the stunning local mountain scenery help to create Kurokawa Onsen’s distinctive charm.

Onsen-hopping Pass

The Nyuto Tegata (onsen-hopping pass) is available for only 1300yen and gives the visitor access to any three of the public outdoor baths belonging to twenty five onsen ryokans in Kurokawa. Wander around the town at your own pace wearing a yukata, stop by a café, then enjoy a relaxing dip. This approach has been adopted by many other onsen regions in Japan today, and stems from the concept of “The Whole Town as an Inn” which was originally conceived in Kurokawa.
We welcome visitors not only from Japan, but from all over the world.

Our aim is to unite the town of Kurokawa, its ryokan and the neighbouring community to create a single resort, where every member of that community strives to provide the visitor, both Japanese and from overseas, with exceptional service. In order to allow everyone to enjoy fully what Kurokawa has to offer the town is working to ensure that information relating to ryokans, restaurants, shopping etc is readily available in a variety of languages. We look forward to your visit and are already hoping to welcome you back again.

You can access restaurant menus, ryokan guides and more in Japanese, English, Mandarin, Cantonese and Korean.

An abundance of green wherever you go

The onsen resort of Kurokawa lies in a valley almost hidden by dense woods. In summer everywhere is green, although you may spot a row of striking bright red spider lilies blooming along the side of the road in late summer. In the background the constant, soothing babble of the Tanoharu-gawa River and nearby mountain streams cools and soothes your soul. If you are lucky, your visit will coincide with the annual summer festival, when the night sky is lit up with fireworks and the sound of the Yamanami taiko drums echoes through the valley.

A curtain of vibrant autumn foliage

In autumn it is as if a curtain of rich red, orange and yellow hues is drawn around Kurokawa. You will see kaki (persimmon) trees beyond the hedgerows, heavily laden, with their bright orange fruit in stark contrast to the often clear blue autumn skies. This is the most picturesque season for visiting Kurokawa and enjoying a rotenburo (outdoor bath) while admiring the autumn colors all around you.

Clear, cold winter air, steam rising from the hot spring baths... these are the kind of scenes of Japan that until now you have only pored over in magazines and coffee table books. Open the door to any inn or store and you will be greeted by an iori (traditional Japanese sunken hearth) as well as hospitable smiles. As you walk briskly through the streets of Kurokawa in your thick hanten (padded jacket worn over a yukata) with your hands tucked up into the sleeves against the cold, the people, food and hot spring baths will soon warm you up again.

Here is why you want to visit Kurokawa Onsen…
The onsen-hopping pass

When it comes down to it, Kurokawa means onsen … it’s not just the old world shopfronts or the unique character of the individual ryokan, it’s not just the delicious food, the atmosphere or the hospitality of the local people, it’s the onsen that have made Kurokawa the success story that it is today. It boasts a large variety of rotenburo (outdoor baths), ranging from cave baths to riverside and mountainside baths as well as 7 (out of a possible 9) types of hot spring water, which is rare even for Japan. To allow visitors (day-trippers as well as staying guests) to make the most of their stay in Kurokawa we offer the Onsen-hopping pass (Nyuto Tegata) for only 1300yen, which enables you to try up to 3 (out of 25) different rotenburo (outdoor baths). The attractive cedarwood pass may be worn around the neck and then kept as a souvenir of your stay in Kurokawa, a talking point when you tell your friends back home about your journey of discovery to a traditional Japanese spa resort in a wooded valley in a remote corner of Kyushu.
